I am writing specifically about the barbed wire I complained about before. Is it too much to ask that it be removed? It's about 5 feet off the ground and half a block from the school on Sundance. It's dangerous and it doesn't serve a purpose - it doesn't actually keep anyone from coming onto the property, even over that very fence. It was put there years ago to deter one individual who was sneaking onto the property at night and it didn't work then, either. The last prowler here was last week right after I complained again about this to the police and it sure seemed staged... they came in from the opposite side of the park, anyway. There is a right way of doing things if a security fence is deemed necessary but this just isn't it. The City doesn't want to deal with it because apparently Ivan has so much clout that he's asserted it's private property and even touching it would constitute trespassing. I understand he's targeted me and is fundamentally against anything I want, but please use some common sense about this and have him remove it. There are several other goals I have socially, legally, and financially - and he's been very successful at creating obstacles for me this year, even conspiring with Barbara's family. But of all the things I've complained about, the barbed wire is as blatantly negligent as it gets. I am pursuing each of my goals separately now, and while I may not be able to get everything I want, I won't let this one rest. I think it's a public safety issue.
