This situation has not been settled. I do not expect a reply from the police, unless there is a legal reason to respond, but I do expect a reply from the owner of Bodhi who this email is to. In fact, I'm demanding a written apology that I can use in court - something to the effect of, 'my mistake, everything is settled now'... or, 'the person who texted you is -' This is not a joke. I am preparing to go to court against DoorDash and someone claiming to be the owner of Bodhi has now caused problems with GrubHub. Giving one of your baristas a love note never had anything to do with my job, or hers. If you are responsible for contacting my employer and involving yourself with my personal life, be prepared to put your name on it. I do not believe you have any legal ground to discriminate against me - and this is age discrimination. You should consider this a legal letter of intent. If you fail to respond to this, you can expect the next documents to be mailed first class alongside a certified copy. I will update my website with this letter on Monday so you have time to get things straightened out, though there has already been ample time. Ignoring this will result in a lawsuit against you.
